

NEWS IN BRIEF

Wiess College, in an all-college referendum yesterday, voted to change the spelling of its name from W-I-E-S-S to W-E-I-S-S. The change will become effective in time to be included in such periodicals as the Campanile, the student directory, and the OWLS calendar.

Charles "Sky" King, ex-president of Wiess (Weiss?) reported that the spelling change would considerably reduce the number of times that the name of the college is misspelled during the year.

Brown and Jones College each passed constitutional amendments last week prohibiting the president of the college from leaving office until she has become engaged.

"Gorgeous" George Frown, sportsman and member of the Rice Board of Control, announced 17 minutes ago that he does not think that Brown College's architecture fits in with the overall symmetry of Rice's neo-classic, early modern Gothic Southern California, washroom architectural style.

His proposed solution is to remove the upper half of the college and place it on the ground along the south side of the lower half. He said that any resulting lack of climbing exercise for the girls would be compensated by the reduced number of complaints about peeping toms from the residents across Sunset Strip.
