Rice Team Debates Health Insurance At Harvard Today

Reed Martin, John Wolf, Jim Bob Doty, and Gary Webb left last Monday night for a debate tour of Eastern colleges and universities.

After watching the House Rules Committee debate during their layover in Washington, D.C., the group proceeded to Boston for the Harvard Invitational Tournament, the largest of its kind in the nation.

THE TOPIC for the Harvard debate is “Should the United States Adopt Compulsory Health Insurance for all Citizens?”.

The four will go on to Princeton Monday for a meeting with the Princeton debate group, then to New York City, Wednesday, February 8, for an exhibition debate with the team from Columbia.

Topic for that debate will be “Should the United States Work for an Economically Federated Europe?”.

THURSDAY, they will be in the second largest invitational collegiate debate meet at Northwestern in Evanston, Ill. This will be the first time that Rice has ever been invited to this tournament.

Martin is a junior philosophy major; Wolf, a senior history major; Doty, a junior history major; and Webb, a senior economics major.

All from Houston, they were active in area interscholastic high school debating.
