

A Great Loss

It will be hard to fill the places left vacant by the deaths of Dr. Asa Chandler and Dr. C. W. Heaps. They were outstanding men, both at Rice and in the world of science.

Many a medical student and successful physician will always be thankful for the work saved in medical school by Dr. Chandler's thoroughness in teaching parasitology and entomology at Rice.

Not many Physics 100 students will ever forget Dr. Heaps' famous "magic shows" to demonstrate physical principles.

Both these men had the quality that makes great teachers—the ability to communicate their enthusiasm in the subject material to their students. Both were gifted not only as lecturers, but as research scholars, and chance could hardly have chosen two men who had contributed more to their students and their school.
