

Council's discount card will be late; lack of co-operation forces delay

The city-wide student discount service sponsored by the Houston Council of Colleges probably will not go into effect until after Christmas vacation, at the very earliest, the Council learned last night.

Charles Jastre, Rice senior and chairman of the discount service committee, gave lack of co-operation by the other colleges as the primary reason for the delay. He stated that the total number of people working with him this summer never exceeded five.

The Council was formed last spring at the initiative of Rice

S.A. President Jerry Hafter. Members are Rice, University of Houston, University of St. Thomas, Texas Southern University, Houston Baptist College, and Sacred Heart Dominican College.

The Council also discussed preliminary proposals for inter-scholastic competition among intramural teams, combined calendar of events services, a city-wide student blood drive, and a constitution. The Council appointed Hafter acting president, and decided to hold future meetings at Rice this year.
