The Rice campus has been discovered to be a publishing center. On investigation one can find as many as fifteen separate publications which are written, edited, or published on campus.

Setting the Thresher and the Campanile into separate classifications, these various publications can be divided into two general categories: scholarly and informative.

IN THE SCHOLARLY category fall such journals as the Journal of Southern History edited by Dr. Philip Detweiler in the Fondren Library. This journal was founded by the Southern Historical Society in 1935, and in February, 1959 its editorial office was moved to the Rice Campus.

The Journal itself is composed of articles and reports submitted by historians from all over the United States, articles, of course, dealing with Southern history. Dr. Detweiler and his editorial board, which includes such noted historians as T. Harry Williams, who spoke on campus last year, choose the best articles for publication. The Journal appears quarterly.

ANOTHER SIMILAR journal is "Studies in English Literature," a new quarterly publication. rice has been founded with the assistance of Marian Carter and Mitzi Myers. "Studies" has one issue each year in four fields, the Medieval, Renaissance, Elizabethan Drama, Restoration and Eighteenth Century English literature, and Nineteenth Century English literature.

Critical essays in these fields are submitted to Dr. Camden and his editorial board, which is composed of experts in each field in the United States and England. About one-third of those submitted are published.

A third journal, similar to the above two, is the Journal of Austrian History, edited by Dr. Rath, the new head of the History Department.

RICE UNIVERSITY Studies, formerly the "Rice Pamphlet," is another scholarly publication which is composed of scholarly and scientific writings in all fields. It is mainly composed of lectures and writings by Rice professors or presented on the Rice campus. The journal is sponsored by the University under the editorship of Dr. Norbeck of the Anthropology Department. An index of all past issues of the Pamphlet published this year is available from the same committee.

The "Rice Engineer" is a semi-scholarly magazine published monthly by engineering students. It includes articles of interest to upperclassmen, E. E.'s, games, puzzles, and cartoons.

Finally, in the scholarly category is "Janus," a student-published literary magazine, formerly published at irregular intervals and composed of student contributions. This year it will be edited by Doug Harlan on funds granted by the Administration.

There are also the various informative publications on campus. The Development Office has three publications under this heading, the "Weekly Calendar of Events," distributed through the Registrar's Office, is merely a weekly schedule of upcoming events on the Rice campus. The "Research Directory" is a biannual index of the various research projects on campus.

"THE RICE REPORT" is a quarterly newsletter sent by the Development Office to alumni and parents of Rice students to keep them abreast of important happenings on campus.

Alumni news is handled by Miss Carol Jones in the Alumni Office. Since December, 1962, she has almost single-handedly put out the quarterly "Rice Alumni Magazine," and in months when the magazine does not appear she edits the "Sallyport," the alumni newspaper.

"THE SEXTANT" is the Navy ROTC newspaper edited by John Aymond. In addition to editing "Rice University Studies," Dr. Norbeck also edits the "Flyleaf," a small quarterly newsletter sent to the Friends of Fondren Library to keep them abreast of library developments.

Finally, "Architecture at Rice" is published by Miss Carol Jones in the Architecture Department whenever there is any architectural news worth noting.
