The necessary steps to make correlate the rules of the year who have abolished hazing entirely.

A weekly periodical published by the student newspaper of the University of Houston, Texas.

The original page is not fully visible, but the text seems to discuss the abolition of hazing at the university. The article mentions that hazing would not be permitted for a year, and the Freshman class is expected to follow the laws of the school sanatorium. The article also mentions that hazing has become less of a problem, and the junior girls are the most affected, with more than a few customs having developed. The article concludes with a statement about the future of hazing in the university community.

HOLE IN CAMPUS PROPHECY OF COMFORT

From the present prospect the future looks encouraging. Like most man-made buildings the dormitories are subject to the laws of time and nature, and those who circulate among them have learned to appreciate the wear and tear on a structure that has seen four years of use and has experienced the summer and winter climate. The windows have been forced open by strong winds, and the floors have tilted slightly, allowing the rooms to develop an unusual atmosphere. The doors have creaked and the stairs have groaned in unison, creating a harmonious melody that adds to the overall charm of the dormitories.

As the years go by, the dormitories become more than just a place to sleep. They become a home away from home, where students form bonds and memories that last a lifetime. The wear and tear become a symbol of the lives that have been lived within these walls, and the atmosphere becomes more personal and unique.

The future looks promising, and with the right maintenance and care, the dormitories will continue to be a comfortable and welcoming place for students for many years to come.
