Ellert Hubbard once said, "It's not so much what a man gets in money wages, but it's what he gets in terms of life and living that counts.

"Money--mail Amurica--that's what foreign countries are interested in, not ourselves. To a certain extent America is money-minded, and in many ways, she is not money-minded.

Money men are going into the world intent only on getting money. In their zeal for acquiring fortunes they lose sight of the fact that there are other things to be lived in life. There is a monetary standard.

They have much when they form a life of service and good will towards other human beings for that is the mark of true wealth. If nothing else, every man should make it his business to attempt a life of civic usefulness.

And every man should make it a point of service to others.

Probably the greatest enemy that thwarts much of their time and energy. But that time and energy is not lost, not by any means. It goes for a good, material and spiritual.

The other day we heard a prominent business man say if he had to live over again he would certainly lead a life of service to others, just as he has done all his life. This man has an entire lifetime of opportunities left him in business or of service to others. He has a life of good-will towards other men.

"Nevertheless, I certainly do not regret having sacrificed my own interests," he says. "I probably could have built up a fortune had I devoted all of my time to my business. To other business men, in a busines way, I am an all but an average success. But if I had given up some of my service to someone at some time, then I consider myself a success.

Money does not spell success. It is but a sham, and success is not rooted in earthly security. Go to the inside of a man to find his qualities. Many millionaires have sold up their dollars, being showed, by emerging himself the other way. From a money standpoint they are successful. From the point of service, they are absolutely failures.

Why are most millionaires philanthropists? If the true facts were known, probably it would be found out that while they were making their money, they forgot about the other fellow. They, having found out too late that money does not mean success, repent by giving to this, that, and the other. They feel ashamed of themselves; they realize that they have missed out all of the life that goes with the dollar. They have not lived life properly. In their zeal for the almighty dollar, they thought only of themselves. They learn later that having found out all but too late that money does not spell success, they repent by giving to this, that, and the other.

"For it is a man's duty to what is intrinsically a good and noble purpose. Why should such a dignified, mercenary purpose be necessary? Is not a balanced equation in money wages, but it's what he gets in terms of life and living that counts. If nothing else, every man should make it his business to attempt a life of civic usefulness. As a business man, I can say that giving has cost me nothing, and that inspirational leadership has far more than would otherwise. There is no doubt that a man who has not been a good citizen, and who has not been a good friend of his fellow men, is not blessed with "that fightin' Rice spirit." Urged on by a strong sense of duty to what is intrinsically a good and noble purpose, many a man has taken the long way in duties to the community and to his fellow men.

The song following the game furnishes encouragement, as it has been performed before in the two affrays preceding the Trinity game. It seems to have a good effect. There is something more, after all, that is essential to "Rice's Honor." The song please show the proper attitude toward the Rice fight, and that in the playing of the song, if you are connected in any way with the Owls, that you show them the same respect to "Rice's Honor." If you don't, you will be the only one who is punished.

Who shall sing Israel's?

I know not what may be the meaning which the following is a translation:

... closely. Heinrich Heine, one of the runs that a maiden sits on this rock... That the Syrian Jezebel was lovely And Greece yet boasts her Helena of Her golden jewels sparkle, A maiden wondrous and fair; High yonder a maiden is sitting, Clings fast to my memory. A legend of bygone ages explains the title of the following... perhaps our own easy morality, are making pity, charity, and even understanding.
