FOOTBALL REFORM PLAN MEETS WITH STORM OF PROTEST

Dartmouth President Would Change Grid Game Radically

However, N. H., May 11, P. A.

The threshold plan of the American football gridiron rules of Dartmouth College has met the storm of protest, both from students of their own institution, including President J. Achtenberg, and from Dartmouth's old men, and some other colleges in the region.

In his paper to the American football gridiron committee, President J. Achtenberg presented the Dartmouth plan, which had been in effect for the past four years. Under the guidance of Chief Executive of the National Football Conference, the Dartmouth plan calls for a two-game series with the rival college, with the goal of scoring an equal number of points. The winning team is awarded the affirmative vote, and the losing team is awarded the negative vote. The final vote is determined by the number of points scored by each team.

In his paper, President J. Achtenberg stated that the Dartmouth plan is designed to promote greater player development and to reduce the risk of injury. He also stated that the plan has been successful in promoting fair play and friendly competition among the teams.

The Dartmouth plan has been adopted by several colleges, including Harvard, Yale, and Princeton. However, some colleges, including Columbia, have not adopted the plan.
