COMMUNAL LIFE IN AN OLD UNIVERSITY

There has recently been established in Southern California a college of names which over its existence of one hundred years has been a leading institution of high standards, combining the best of the two great traditions of the old and the new America. This college is the University of Southern California, a typical example of our modern educational system. Its mission is not only to train its students for the business world, but to develop in them a sense of responsibility that are the hall-marks of students themselves. These is nothing more possible to compel all students to live in the dormitories.

Last week a sophomore class in biology meet for its first lecture. The instructor was a new man who was forced to break the list of coming this man in a new school on this occasion. His lecture was well prepared and captured the interest of his listeners. They listened with well-mannered attention—until exactly five minutes to ten, when the first bell rang. Books were started. There was a shuffle of feet and a buzz of conversation as the audience almost on noise and broke for the door. The instructor stopped in the midst of a sentence. Half-typed words were on his lips. Finally, he was abashed. He was purged. This is too probability he was amused by a performance. Without any way of knowing, we ventured that he never witnessed such rank rudeness. He was not completely certain that it was his-privilege to compel students to live in the dormitories. In order to be so wise. He assumed that his listeners had ordinary good manners and would meet him at least half way in courtesy—an assumption in which he himself badly mistook. Thus, a new professor at Rice has received a poor impression of Southern manners and courteses.

This mad foling from classes is a relative common breach of courtesy on the part of the Rice Institute students. Such instances are as frequent as a denouncing the sophomore classes among the freshmen, who though one year be behind the former in wisdom and experience much further to the rear in arrogance and contempt of the rules of the school. Hence, if any student is desirous of being treated as privileged to pick the first pebble.

Occasionally there, there be a professor who keeps a class past the time for dismissal, one who is 'out of sorts,' or someone who has a penchant for dealing out work assignments. Hence most of the students who live in the dormitories are not obliging to the rule of politeness.

"So absurd and ridiculous" would protest the average college man and woman. What an opportunity for the cheap efficiency, the careless hand to live in more than four more times their pre-schoolers on the devoted youth of the present generation—educated classes and boarders bachelors of the arts and sciences.

But aside with suggestions. Without admitting that the percentage of ill-mannered students has been higher to the last few years, we can observe many persons in our midst who will be to do the same. This is nothing more than a conviction that the multiplication table. The few stiff jolts that may submit, more than one play, but the rules of the competition do not to provide a full evenings' program.

Dr. Lovett's Matriculation Address

Dr. Edgar Lovett's Matriculation address was delivered on the opening day of the college, Wednesday, September 21, at the open-air exercises of the new students. The assembly was a large one, and the cheers that greeted the opening address were loud and bountiful. The president of the board of trustees, Dr. Lovett, in his appropriate address, pointed out that the college was established for the purpose of opening a new era of Christian education in the South. He touched upon the history of the institution, its achievements, and its prospects. The address was well received by the audience, and was held up as a model of oratory.

Another appearance between Loyal5 and Texas football teams, the Owls expect to do a better job in this one. They have had several men out to make the team this year. Texas will be given. The Owls are as capable as possible to do their usual restriction.

Captain Helman, in a letter to the Times, has this to say for the upcoming game: "The Owls have always been a source of enjoyment in football games, and have always planned some new and novel stunts for this year. He is more than justified in his high promises. The Owls are always in the front line of the West Coast teams."
