CONSECRATION AMONG UNBELIEVERS

The students who did not hear the Reverend Peter Gray Sears' sermon at the dedication of Patmos Memorial Chapel last Sunday missed a remarkably fine and reflections-provoking address.

Doctor Sears spoke of the beauty of the love that can span the gulf of death and find expression in the consecration of a life to the service of God. It was the place of this chapel in a great university dedicated to the pursuit of secular knowledge. It is justified and demanded, he said, by the instinct of service, which civilization, on this secular knowledge, refines and sublimates but does not, or can not, eradicate. Not only does it not eradicate it, but civilization's finest achievements are generated and suffused with this instinct of worship. Science face to face with the eternal mysteries of universe, philosophy finding its highest expression in the moral law, poetry reaching its most sublime heights in finding its highest expression in the moral law, music, poetry, art, science and mankind in prayer all declare it to be at the heart of knowledge and love.

Such was his thesis, and there were few of his hearers who were not impressed, and at least some of them were convinced. It is safe to wager, heart, of knowledge and culture.

A PROTEST

The recent issue of The Thresher called attention to the small town called "Thresh," which used to run in the paper. The town itself now that we lack the time to provide such a worthy feature. I disagree with him. In this age of the greatest minds of the past, the natural thing that would keep brightness from us is to have some sense that things are true.

And, to show how serious I am in the matters of this glorious cause, I am appealing some of my own to support the paper. As a student body, as a group of fives, you have the right to decide, to choose, to conclude, wherever we see fit to take a stand.

Oh, none of these contain strong thoughts, and well-defined. Where all the others warlike, like water, are mild.

With none of these, or sorts of fire, of line, of soul.

Then commence with burning heart or printer made of wood.

Here to close, Consecration, which we shall not use in the spirit here of these, of school, and all.

And all is shaking the ignorance.

When Xerxes wept

The great Persian ruler gazed from a hill-top upon his vast army of a million men. It was the largest army that had ever existed. And he turned away with tears in his eyes because in a hundred years all trace of it would be gone. That army was a symbol of power, destructive and transient.

Today in one machine, now being built in the General Electric shops, there is combined the muscular energy of two million men. This great machine, a steam turbine, is also a symbol of power—a new power that is constructive and permanent.

The unprecedented size, shape and size of such machines, is a pledge to the people that the electrical industry on the march, ever on the alert to supply plenty of electricity at a low cost to all.
