Author of "Perpetual Passion" May Assist In Production

The offices of the Dramatic Club have received word this past week that the author of "Perpetual Passion" may assist in production of that play. The author, James J. Tom, has written stating that the announcements of the film production have led him to believe that the novel "Perpetual Passion" may be of interest to the Dramatic Club. Mr. Tom has expressed a desire to visit the University of Rice and has suggested that the club might consider producing the play. The Dramatic Club has given serious consideration to this offer and is currently in the process of deciding whether or not to proceed with the production of "Perpetual Passion."
AN INVITATION

Next week the Rho Dramatic Club is in present a melodrama, "Perceptual Passion," at their January offering. By a dramatist whose identity is remaining considerable speculation and accurably sensational to the one of the club's friends and patrons. The past the club has had the reputation of increasing interest and standing, primarily in the matronly and intellectual minds of the city. The meeting will be held in the common room in the office of the club, it is believed that the forthcoming production is designed specifically to materialize this presentation.

The presentation of an old-time melodrama will be held at the club's own expense, and no admission to any party will represent a lowering of the club's standards, but it does represent a true and good cause for which the students should respond.

The presentation of the club's productions has been splendidly and successfully small, and those who have attended have been for the most part (two people and members of the faculty.) It is in itself a true representation of the students, and all members, is essentially an understanding ability and a true support of undergraduates, as much as athletics or publications serve their support.
