ATHLETICS IN DANGER

Fay Jones

Athens, Ohio, Feb. 16.—Athletic directors of a number of Ohio colleges were suddenly summoned to a meeting of the Ohio Intercollegiate Athletic Association to discuss the difficult problem of the future of the athletic program of the school. The directors immediately addressed the question of the possible closure of the school due to financial difficulties. They also discussed the possible merger with other athletic programs to increase resources and improve the overall program.

WATKINS LECTURES ON ARCHITECTURE

Architecture Expresses Spirit of Age Says Learned

Mr. William W. Mathews delivered a lecture on the architectural principles that express the spirit of the age.

"Architecture is not just a means of expression, but it is a reflection of the society and culture in which it exists. The design and structure of a building can reveal much about the values, beliefs, and aspirations of the people who commission it." Mr. Mathews explained.

ATHLETICS: FEWER ATHLETES BUST IN FEBRUARY

Better Work Attributed To Greater Interest

Although an accurate attendance statistics were not available, it was reported that the number of athletes on campus had decreased significantly. The athletic director attributed the decrease to increased interest in other activities and a more selective approach to recruiting. The director also mentioned that the decrease in attendance could be attributed to the inclement weather during February.

WHY NOT SOME DEBATE?

I am writing this letter in hopes that it will be published in the Thresher this coming Wednesday, as I feel that this will be an appropriate time to speak about some issues that are currently being debated at Rice University.

One such issue is the debate over the construction of new athletic facilities, particularly the proposed stadium. Many students and alumni are concerned about the cost and impact of such a project, while others argue that it is necessary for the university to maintain its status as a competitive varsity program.

Another topic of debate is the upcoming election for student body president. While the candidates have presented their platforms, many students feel that there is a lack of transparency and accountability in the process.

I urge all members of the Rice community to participate in these discussions and to voice their opinions. As a student, I believe it is important to be informed about the issues and to engage in constructive dialogue. Thank you for considering my letter.

Sincerely,

[Your Name]

College Students of 1734 Were Models if Rules Held

Philip Morrell, a senior engineering student, in giving three short speeches, has reconstructed the Harvard University reputation of the year 1734, Morrell, after reading the leading essays, does not think that college regulations in those days are too restrictive of personal freedom. "All the scholars shall, at sunset, in the creative poem, King Lion's bay, recite to their classmates, and to the university as a whole as
