MORE ABOUT THE ELECTIONS
The Thresher has always done its best to keep the student political atmosphere that is making the campus a very pleasant student fraternity. The University of Colorado is, perhaps, the only place in the country where the students are free from the slings and arrows of office, where they are not afraid to speak their minds and where they can do so without fear of retribution.

In the past, the University of Colorado has been a center of liberal education, where students have been free to think and speak as they please. This is not to say that there have been no elections, but the atmosphere has always been one of free expression and open discussion.

The students of the University of Colorado are not only free to speak their minds, but they are also free to vote. The University of Colorado has a long tradition of democratic governance, and the students are always encouraged to participate in the electoral process.

The University of Colorado is proud of its rich history of political freedom. It is a place where students can come to learn, grow, and express their ideas without fear of retribution. The University of Colorado is a model for what higher education should be.

Individual Battles Between Conference Aces Are Highlights

Coach E. T. Meyer and 25 Rice Owls-Hawks will go to Agricultural Stadium for a triangular track and field meet with Clyde Littlefield’s Texas Longhorns and Fink Anderson’s Texas Aggies.

The most should go for in fulfilling the conference challenge to be amongst the best balanced track and field teams in the Southwest, practically all the competition the conference has to offer with the exception of T. C. U. Spirets of S. M. U. and Stagg_medium of Baylor. The Owls rule as prime favorites to take the meet and the conference title for the best balanced track and field units in the history of the conference.

Individual duels will worth many times the price of admission and will see a fast men who follow the record of Doherty and O’Neal in Agricol in the miles and 880 yards event.
