A nerve system for energetic skyscrapers

Long before the huge bulk of a new skyscraper looms up, Bell System men have planned its nerve system—the mass of telephone cables and wires vital to its business activities.

From the inception of a building design, telephone engineers work hand in hand with the architects. They determine the telephone needs of thousands of future tenants. Then they plan cable shafts rising from cellar to roof and the grid of under-floor ducts that will put telephones within easy reach of every occupant.

There’s a real thrill in working out these plans, for without telephones the immense structures of today would hardly be practicable.

Radio Rambles

No, this is not a radio program, but it has been written so as to make the reader feel as though he were listening to a play or a speech. It is a play on words, and it is in the form of a song, with music and words set to the rhythm of the radio broadcast.

Who is the author of this story? It is written by no less a person than the famous radio personality, Mr. J. B. Hare. He has written many such stories, and has become so popular that his work is now being published in book form.

The story is told in the form of a dialogue between a radio announcer and a group of listeners. The announcer is describing the weather, the news, and the events of the day, and the listeners are expressing their reactions to what is being said. The dialogue is interspersed with songs and music, and the effect is very pleasing.

The story is a good example of how radio can be used to entertain and inform the public. It is a story that will be enjoyed by all who listen to it, and it is a story that will be remembered for many years to come.
