Now that we have rated the R and not to mention the X, we feel justified in urging all our friends who have not been fully apprised of the situation to get a move on. Are we to assume that the thoughtless public has never heard of the countless number of parents who have been taken in by the ruse and are now-shell-shocked, broken-hearted, and confused about what to do next? They are in a quandary about whether to continue or to abandon the picture in mid-scene, and they are not sure about the moral implications of the situation. They are at a loss about how to discuss the matter with their children, and they are not sure about how to explain the matter to themselves.

On your campus five per cent of your students have a keen interest in the arts. They are not interested in the arts because they are not interested in the arts, but because they are interested in the arts.
