Sharrar Defends New Deal Address to Rice Pre-Law Society

Former Rice Instructor of Economics and Jurisprudence

 volume 13, no. 12, dec. 6

No Thrasher next week: patience till then

Mr. Sharrar defended the new deal in the light of the three chief criticisms of it by the business critics: the gold reserves, the dollar deficit, and the explanation of the dollar deficit.

Mr. Sharrar presented the new deal as a pattern of the evolution of the government into an agent of the people. "The reason why this is a pattern is that the program has been a test for the people's needs. In every country, in every state, the people want to know what the government has been able to do for them; and this government has been able to do far more than any government has ever been able to do before." Mr. Sharrar explained that the new deal has been a test for the government's ability to plan and to organize itself. "The government has been able to plan and organize itself in such a way that it is now able to plan and organize itself in the future; and this is a pattern; it is a pattern of the evolution of the government into an agent of the people." Mr. Sharrar concluded his address by stating that the new deal is a pattern of the evolution of the government into an agent of the people.

The Rice Owls have a chance to clinch the Southwest Conference title this weekend. If they win, they will have secured the conference championship for the first time in their history. The Owls, who are currently 7-0 in conference play, will face the University of Texas at Austin, who are 6-1. The Owls' victory would give them a 1-0 head-to-head record against the Aggies.

The game is expected to be a tight contest, with both teams vying for the top seed in the conference tournament. The Owls have a strong defense, ranking second in the conference in points allowed (11.8 per game), and a potent offense, averaging 28.7 points per game. The Aggies, on the other hand, have a balanced attack, averaging 24.9 points per game, with a strong rushing attack (126.6 yards per game) and a solid passing game (290.0 yards per game).

The key matchup will be on the defensive line, with Rice's aggressive line looking to stop the Aggies' powerful running game. If the Owls can neutralize the Aggies' running attack, they will have a good chance of clinching the conference championship. However, the Aggies will not go down without a fight, and the Owls will need to be at their best to secure the victory.
