Place of Atomic Bomb, Other Scientific Developments Discussed
By Nobel Prize Winner Tuesday Night

Professor S. Svedberg, Nobel Laureate and visiting lecturer from the University of Upsala, Sweden, told an interested audience of scientists and friends Tuesday evening, May 21, that in order to achieve a peaceful world we must curb the "urge to demand." Only a real penetration of Nature's laws can bring this about.

The governments of the world cannot distinguish between scientific research and notoriety, and vocational research organizations, including special research institutions, and training many young people for the war. The trend toward concentration of the machine is seen in the diminishing time intervals between scientific discovery and practical application.

He added that the atomic bomb was mentioned here. However, scientific advance alone will not insure world civilization; advances in the humanities and the social sciences must keep pace.

This lecture entitled "Man and Machine" was the second in a series of two delivered by the Nobel Prize winner in the Physics Academy.

The first, entitled "Forty Years of Colloid Chemistry," given May 20, was a more technical discussion of problems before the colloidal chemist forty years ago and today, of the tools and methods used to solve these problems, and other methods. Dr. Svedberg mentioned the ultra centrifuge which can be used in research laboratories, and the electron microscope which has been developed to see the particle size and molecular weights of colloids.

Dr. Svedberg is Professor of Physical Chemistry at Upsala University, and the author of some fifteen books, including "Colloid Chemistry." He is also an authority on the chemistry of organic compounds and has been a research associate at the University of California.

Students Study Pressing Problem ---- Activities

Bunkers work these days are mostly in public service, trying to improve the conditions of the city and the nation. They spend approximately 12 weeks each individual in the Navy, working at a Naval Air Station on and returning to their homes during the weekends, or after a period of leave, to be with their families. They receive their "Wings of Gold" and his commission after completing their training at a Naval Air Station. This training includes a thorough instruction in the art and the science of flying, as well as the use of various types of aircraft. After completing their training, they are assigned to various locations around the country, where they continue to sharpen their skills and prepare for their next assignment.
The Navy Dans was a bowling success, with Joe Cash playing much of the planted, strike-flop-fly story. We hear that Long and Jim Fox are playing some kind of bowling at the A.E. ball lot after work. Too bad, they were all alone. Not bad at all. Did you have the fortunate experience Friday night?

I should have heard the latest symphony.

Next day both September, April, June, and Eddie Graham. Wanda Randahl was working a beautiful orchid at the Moonlight Mood that was sent by Manning Lipp.

Ray Harely had trouble fighting off Bob Maurice. Sue had a big spider crawling around on her back all evening.

Secondly, we should all try to make this building more than the sum of its parts by suggesting which groups should be served in a building of this type. For example, what are the fundamental functions and activities for which spaces should be provided? What are some of the plans for arrangement of rooms that you have in mind? Where should such a building be located? What ideas do students have for such a building?

It is not a meeting between a representative group of students and one of our fared sighted instructors, but a first step in collecting ideas and analyzing them. Also a poll has been suggested. Such a poll would be a definite loss. When a building is planned, the architect generally has a group of larvae present the needs of the groups to be served. We, therefore, hope this publicity and any mention of the subject in the future will be regarded as a sincere effort to plan and planned efforts to provide some adequate facilities in order in which they are needed.

The Thresher suggests that you insert your ideas in the blanks left after reading the article defining the purposes of the poll.

(1) In planning a "House Activities Building," what facilities have to be provided for the purposes of the building satisfied?

(a) Would it be desirable to have space in this building for an auditorium or should this be a separate building?

(b) Should there be a stage in this building?

(c) What facilities should be provided for dancing?

(d) What departments on the campus, such as the Men's and girls' sports, should be included?

(II) Where should this building be located?

(III) How could we finance this building?

The whole thing was character-
