In response to the view of Mr. Smith, the Thresher last week had an article on the issue of student governance.

Since the G. E. L. Bill is now in effect, it is necessary to ask that the government of the bill be on its feet. The question of whether the government of the bill is on its feet is a matter of some concern. The Thresher will keep you posted on the latest developments.

Notice

Anyone interested in serving as a Business Manager of the Thresher should contact the College Council meeting Tuesday, April 18, at the Student Union. All bills will be considered. Rabbi A.S. Green Calls For Deeper Analysis of Jews

Rabbi A.S. Green, a noted rabbi and author, has called for a deeper analysis of the Jewish people. He stated: "We must not be content with surface-level analysis of the Jewish people. We must delve deeper into their history, culture, and experiences.

The Jewish people have not always had an easy time. They have faced discrimination, persecution, and mobs throughout their history. But they have persevered and fought for their rights."

Rabbi Green also emphasized the importance of understanding the Jewish experience in its historical context. He noted: "The Jewish people have been fighting for their rights for centuries, and we must learn from their struggle.

Rabbi Green concluded his statement by calling for a deeper understanding of the Jewish people. He stated: "We must not be content with surface-level analysis of the Jewish people. We must delve deeper into their history, culture, and experiences.

"We must learn from the Jewish people's experiences and apply them to our own lives."

Speak Now

Ninety-nine petitions for office have been approved for the General Election which will be held Monday. Although there are some candidates who are unopposed, the majority of offices have a number of capable candidates running.

Last Tuesday the Student Council took a definite step in an effort to increase the number of votes cast by moving the polling place from Sallyport to the Chemistry Building, a more accessible location for the convenience of those students who, for various reasons, find it difficult to go to Sallyport to cast their vote.

The subject of elections has been thoroughly discussed and commented upon and there is actually no need for anything to be said. However, it may be best to make one last statement.

After this election there will be no justification for anyone to collect any result caused by the outcome of the election. Let us revert to the trite phrase—"speak now or forever hold your peace." You may speak by casting your vote in Monday's election.

Campign Signs

A recent one-man campaign to improve campus posters is showing up with fine results in the pre-election Sallyport array.

Signboards are clever, well-constructed, and painted distinctly. It is commendable that students are putting some of their campaign money into professional work, with the result that more and more interest is being taken in the elections.

With ninety-nine candidates running, competition is extremely high. The greater percentage of boys assuming their political aspirations is providing more widespread interest in this election. In fact it is probable that more students will go to the polls because of the added enthusiasm. This interest is being elevated by the excellence of campaign posters, which will do much to remit the student body that elections will be held Monday, March 31.—W. B.

HITS AND HIGHLIGHTS

BY ROBERT FLAIG

IN THE YEARS to come thousands of stories, books and motion pictures will be written about World War II and Allied life in countries under the German Occupation. Few will achieve the degree of excellence that the Italian made film "Open City" does. Although the dialogue is in Italian and German, the English subtitles flashed on the bottom of the screen detract little from the force this picture exerts.

"Open City" was released Rome shortly after the Nazi invasion and was photographed with a minimal amount of equipment on the set of a film company building under the direct supervision of the Germans. Yet, in spite of these difficulties and a limited budget, "Open City" stands as a monument of portrayed truth that seems to be impossible for an American-made film to attain.

The first scene of the Italian made after the war was over—soon enough to hear the bearers of the battle deep inside in the thick of the enemies, acts and activities. It was produced in a little black box the next day and depicts a German soldiery who, on their way to the front, is blown up. Germany is shown as a country in ruins, a country that has been occupied by the enemy and lives in constant fear of it.

"RIGHTEOUS" tells a truly touchening story of a German camp, showing the endurance and determination of human spirit. In the center of this film, we see a simple portrait of the German soldiers, the men who have been captured and are awaiting their fate. The men are held by an agent of the Nazis and expelled and expelled from their homes and possessions.

"THE YEARS to come" tells the story of thousands of American soldiers who were captured and held by the Japanese. In a close-up scene where she is shown as a German soldier, the spectator is easily imagines the horror of such quality that the spectator is left with a taste that is not easily expunged.

"EVENINGS TILL SEVEN" is the story of the German soldier who is forced to witness the torture by the Gestapo. This was the first film the Italian made, and it is when the priest is forced to listen to the suffering of his friend. When Manfreidi finally dies, Dom Pietro's spirit is set free.

"FOR GOOD THINGS TO EAT" tells the story of the American soldier who is captured and held by the Japanese. In a close-up scene where she is shown as a German soldier, the spectator is easily imagines the horror of such quality that the spectator is left with a taste that is not easily expunged.
