Graduate students working on their degrees do not have time to enjoy the social life that is enjoyed by the undergraduate students. They are too busy with their work, and do not have time to take part in the social activities of the college.

What is War?

Your Vote Is Your War.

Editor's Note: This, the seventh article in the What is War series, is taken from a letter home written by a B-17 navigator in Europe April 23, 1945.

The truth rumbled along the test strip, tearing its way through the murky mists and the almost solid black of early morning. It seemed to me that much of the flash was . . . and . . .

We taxied out, lit up and moved up. The plane strained as each engine raced at full power separately . . . and . . .

...and suddenly we were rolling.

We started rolling into the mist. On and on ... 60 miles an hour ... 90 ... 110 ... 150 miles per hour.

This was heavy and base was up the runway and we started right in.

In the clouds. Clouds had been predicted, but nothing like this. Bold from 200 to 16000 feet. There you have the reason for so many young men having gray hairs. Few things can make such exclamation as clouds.

We almost had to fly by the seat of our pants, such one balled with deadly bombs.

So we wanted to fly by a set pattern. But you never know which one of a thousand factors may bring two planes together.

Then we were near. Like a giant purpose leaping from the ocean, we roped out of that sea of clouds. "Pilot to Navigator," the voice crackled in my earphone. "Give me a heading." We had almost forgotten that we had to fly individually to a point on the continent where the group was to assemble.

I quickly gave him a heading. We proceeded along. At my estimated time of arrival began to run out, I began to sweat, even at 20 below. There were others planes there should be dozens of them around. Perhaps I was wrong.

WHERE? there we roared towards Dunkirk, flying for hours through clouds. Then they began to thin out. Where are the mountains below the Alps looming up to our very wingtips. Eaves at 18000 feet. I saw two large lakes. We were getting close.

We went on to the last turning point and headed for the target. Here was the most crucial part of the job.

The plane below us was a B-17. The tail gunner called out. "But a 51 is after him!"

But I wasn't worried about enemy fighters. I was mostly concerned with the ship flying above us. Now, theoretically, the ship was directly above another bomber. There was less than 5000 feet directly over my head, was a ship's bomb bay with its morning powder deck. I must count the bombs and dodge.

The away, but every time we came back into formation, we would come over and attack. Only one change to go.

"Look up there"! Flying a few thousand feet directly above us was an English outfit. Their bombs were dropping! I watched in helpless fascination as a stick of bombs dropped right in front of our nose. Another dropped off our left wing. And their other squadron was coming. "Wrong ship" above us chose that moment to be over where he belonged so that his bunch had the wrong right wing.

WHEN it was all over! The planes began gathering together, and we headed for home. The clouds closed in; we dropped on in that overpowering, overwhelming whiteness for hours and then broke into the open-sky! "Well, Navigator," the voice droned, "we've lost the formation. We'll have to make it back alone!"

I quickly gave him a heading. We proceeded along. The pilot's voice came. "B-17's ahead!"

So I gave him one, and we plumbed into the mist. If we went too far west toward the Town on French coast we turned to pick, we hit Dunkirk where so many of us had fallen. If we went too far north, we'd cross their coastlines in England and France.

Well, just before we got to the coast, a few breaks appeared in the clouds. I happened to spot a town. I looked again and almost cried with relief. "That's it. That's the town we had to hit!"

A chorus of congratulations poured over the interphone to be broken by the tail gunner's cry, "Flak!" It was faced all right, from Dunkirk. A whole squadron in a strengthening sort of a formation had gone right over the city.

So we got home. We dodged after nine hours of flying, ready to get 100 miles of sleep.

Well, Mom and Dad, you wanted to know what a mission is like.

RICE COED IN LOVE WITH PROF REALIZES TICKLISH SITUATION

Dear Miss Space:

I know that you are quite interested in your studies, but when I think of your approaching graduation I realize that you may be thinking of the future as well. You are thinking a lot about your future, and a lady in your situation really isn't as bad as you might imagine. Have unwarried professors been asked their opinions for advice? I've indulged in the expression as to whether they ever help you. You have the right of arrangement that Rice needs in the past, and you're ever your own professors. Perhaps you'd better try to take notes, though perhaps you don't see the point in being in his class.

Miss Space, what can I do to charm him out for a dance? He couldn't be so incredibly rich. He is rather more often a lot. There must be some way to break the互通 between you and me, and still not put him in an embarrassing situation.

None help are.

Owls To Meet Arkansas Porkers

For Third Place In Conference After Splitting Last Two Games

The towering Arkansas Razorbacks will move into Houston this weekend for a basketball series with Rice in which the Owls hope to make their bid for a third-place tie.

The Owls are now in a tie for second place with Texas, each with nine wins and four losses, while Rice is fourth with a 9-6 mark.

A double win would draw the Owls with Texas, ahead of Rice, but a double loss would make Rice's bid for a third-place tie.

The teams are tied with Texas at 5-0, and Rice is at 4-1. The Owls have won their last three games, while Rice has lost its last two.

The Owls' next game will be against Rice, a tough team to play against. Rice has been playing well in recent games, and the Owls will need to step up their game to come out on top.

The Owl Outlook

If most of you are like I am, you have trouble keeping track of coming events, so with the cooperation of the Sports Editor, I field have on hand a complete schedule of spring sports available in the paper. It might be handy to stick in your wallet or on your wall.

Warren Switzer

One of the most ambitious, well-rounded players on the Owl quintet this year has been Warren Switzer. He came to Rice after being drafted by the service in 1942 and spent 20 minutes in conference play last year. While in the service he was a member of a Camels team which went on to win the national title.

As far as having a well rounded players on the Owls is concerned, and as the usual back-up player, Switzer has an extra 20 minutes in conference play last season. While in the service he was a member of a Camels team which went on to win the national title.

The Owls won the North Texas title and played in two hard-fought conference games, beating UT and Mississippi State for the MEAC title. In the MEAC game they were defeated in Houston, Texas.

The Owls are the only team in the MEAC that has a chance to win the MEAC title this year. They will need to play well in their remaining games to have a chance of winning the title.

The Owls' next game will be against Rice, a tough team to play against. Rice has been playing well in recent games, and the Owls will need to step up their game to come out on top.

Oh, how the times have changed since the end of the war. My son, now in his mid-twenties, cannot fully appreciate the significance of the events that occurred. It is as if the world has been turned upside down, with the old order gone and the new one yet to be born.

The war has left its mark on everything, from the way we live to the way we think. The old ideals have been shattered, and new ones have yet to be formed. It is as if we are standing at the very edge of a new era, with the past behind us and the future ahead.

As I look back on the war, I am filled with a sense of wonder and awe. It is hard to believe that such a time could have happened, and yet it did. It is a time that will be remembered forever, a time that will be studied and debated for generations to come.
