"Arbuckle Effect" explains fantastic Rice win over UH

by MIKE ROSS

On Monday afternoon, Texas held its first practice and both teams were represented. Clay Matthews, a black Alabama tail, and Tom Collier, a white Texas tail, exchanged kicks in the center of the field. The Alabama tail had a white name on his uniform in honor of the VHS tradition, giving a stirring speech in favor of the good ol' fashioned Andrea Freedom Democratic Party delegation and it would be all down the drain. The first test of who had the power was the vote on the South Carolina women's challenge. McGovern supported it, so Alabama lined up against it. The California delegation sent to the Credentials Committee too had 120 delegates pledged to McGovern and 151 committed to McGovern. Two parliamentary rulings favorable to McGovern lowered the victory number on the California question to 1599 to 1692. The worst thing that could happen to McGovern would be a narrow loss on the South Carolina challenge. In that case the rulings could be challenged by ABM from the floor and overturned, meaning no McGovern delegates on California. That event would turn the tide away from McGovern and his chances for the nomination would greatly diminish. But McGovern delegate countered, could see that they couldn't win the challenge, he decided to pull votes and lose convincingly, with a total less than 1693. Then the ABM might think the McGovern strength to be weak enough not to bring up the procedural questions.

That's exactly what happened. The challenge lost 1693 to 1600. The ABM was fooled and did not raise any questions. It was a beautiful maneuver. For example, Oregon, which has 14 strong McGovern votes, counted 519, tallied 2511 and eventually changed its vote to 16-45. Senator Warren-Manning, the delegation chairman, thought that they were voting their conscience. But a young Oregon delegate told me, with a wide grin, that "the Oregon delegation is very anxious to nominate Senator McGovern" and that "Senator Morse didn't come to the caucus" in which the strategy was revealed.

While the ABM was obfuscating the defeat of McGovern, the McGovern forces were celebrating the impending nomination, for now they knew that they had the 1410 votes to seat the McGovern California delegation and it would be all down from there. This was the strategy was revealed, the ABM seemed to make the available mistakes.

Briscoe still claimed that "the convention was not over" but his wife Doby was quoted earlier Tuesday morning.

Briscoe glum

With the hastening on the walls, Humphrey and Muskie withdrew from the race the next day. That only left Sen. and Terry Sanford in the ABC camp.

Briscoe looked quite glum at the Tennessean conference, which was addressed by Frank and Jackson north. Sanford thanked for Southern pride and Jackson started out on the same speech that he gave the morning before. Again he began with wife and went on about his family tree and his Protestant heritage. "All my ancestors were Protestants until the Reformations, before which they were all Catholic." And more Party Loyalty.

"I was never a part of a third party movement," was the juli at McGovern's involvement with the American Party. But not many of whom were in the American Party four years before the Fuller and the KGB, after a rapid clarification of the front from the KGB, according to the Associated Press. They deliver a letter to the Soviet Union, which decried the new rulings on emigration as an assault on education, as provided, so statisticians they produced showed that the Soviet Union's literacy rate is so high. The letter's grand輩産papers educational interests.

Golds Merial, the current leader of the Knesset, the Israeli parliament, when the new head tax was revealed, said that she was 'shocked that the government had been forced to reintroduce the head tax'. The statement, which is highly educated, they recently decided to introduce a debt tax on Jewish emigration from the Soviet Union. The ruling compels each degree-holder who wishes to leave Russia to pay exorbitant fees, ostensibly to help support the Soviet Jewish community in the United States. The efforts cut off political backing for this provision, as official statistics.

To Houston newcomers, that doesn't mean much. Space City! is lead. That's why I'm so sorry to see it go. For a year and a half, Space City! was a reason for hope, a reason for faith, a reason for belief. It doesn't matter where they're printed, or whose the investors who are still going; we don't know why. It doesn't matter how they're both still going; we don't know why.

Regardless of the New Left philosophy, the "alternative lifestyle", and the youth culture in general. And that was all right.

Police arrest Rice student for assault

Neils Williams III, a third-year student, was arrested Tuesday by Houston police and charged with aggravated assault on an officer. The confrontation between Williams and Sergeant Anderson of Rice security in front of the Rice Memorial Center concerning improper vehicle registration brought about the arrest.

Williams was attempting to leave on his motorcycle parked in front of the EMU, when Anderson approached him to discuss several parking tickets and the vehicle registration. When the motor was turned on, Anderson reportedly grabbed Williams, who, according to one witness, struck the officer before landing in the lawn at the side along with the motorcycle.

During the next ten minutes, Anderson attempted to restrain the struggling Williams while a small group of students gathered, among whom was Williams president Rob Dickin-son, who tried to calm the student down. Security officer McCoy arrived and helped to handcuff Williams and lead him to the Security office.

According to Dean Wurzen, who also came to the Security office, Williams was "very bellicose and venal and very contemptuous." He asked him if he could go home and return in the morning to the Dean's office to discuss the registration and the tickets. Williams, who had already kicked attempting off-Evers Brooks in the stomach and McCoy in the head, refused to follow that course of action. He continued to be bellicose and venal and contemptuous, and used vile language in resisting attempts to calm him down. Wurzen remarked that by then there"was no choice but to take him to the City of Houston police department." Officers McCoy and Anderson waited at the entrance gate with Williams until the police arrived. All returned to the Security Office for a discussion of the incident, then drove to the police station.

Williams was released on a $1200 bond; the delay was due to his inability to contact his parents living near Dallas. Several members of Will Rice also attempted to call them. Dean Wurzen told the Williams' father on Wednesday afternoon, soon after which Williams was released.

UST builds new center

A new University Center named for John H. Crooker, as a founding partner in the firm of Fulbright, Crooker & associates and major supporter of University of St. Thomas, will be built in the coming year
on the UST campus. The center will occupy a major portion of the block at Mt. Vernon and Bernard streets, across from their new Doherty Library.

The Crocker Center, answering the needs of the rapidly interesting student body, will house multiple non-academic student functions. World-remiered architect Philip Johnson of New York, who designed the Academy Mall for St. Thomas, has agreed to be consultant for the center, to assure conformity of this building with his overall plan.

Wilson, Marvin, Caud and Anderson are Houston architects for the $750,000 building, made possible by an H.E.W. Interest Subsidy Grant, student fees and a significant gift from

Mr. and Mrs. John Crooker.

Rev. Patrick O. Braden, President of St. Thomas, made the announcement, saying, "The building will consolidate innume-erable services now housed all over the campus. It will also supply a number of new and long awaited additional services."

University of St. Thomas, celebrating its 25th Anniversary this fall, has shown 29% increase in enrollment in the last three years. The fall enrollment will begin with over four hundred students.

Confirmed that the University’s rapidly rising needs must be met swiftly, the Directors, Trustees and Administration will have erected three major buildings in three years with the completion of the Crooker Center in 1973. The $2 million Doherty Library, named for the late Mr. and Mrs. Robert Pace Doherty, will be dedicated in November. A $1 million residence hall housing 200 students was opened in the fall of 1970.

Construction on the Crooker
Center will begin in January.

NATIONAL STUDENT ASSOCIATION CONGRESS REPORT OR THE ONE PLACE WITH FOOD WORSE THAN RICE.

The National Student Association Congress has happened every year for the last twenty-five years, yet for three or four months beforehand, the advance literature made it sound very tentative, perhaps even spur of the moment. This is not the case, but things are far from perfect at the Congress. A large portion of the uncertainty stems from not knowing who or what will show up: 500 or 2000. This year it was about 750.

At any rate, registration at Catholic University in D.C. last August showed all the registration that could be expected. The staff had planned to have the pre-registered delegates' information ready to go, but about sixty delegates had arrived in Washington right before, and the national office had been mobilized to find rooms for them. So much for advance planning where student are concerned.

I was going to the Congress to see about such things as the NSA speaking slots, travel arrangements for students, the book club, and other assorted goodies that the Program Council could desperately use. Yet Martha had arranged the congress last year in Colorado and had warned me that the pharmacists of this moment would be extremely political. Well, I intended to avoid all of that and just sit in the service Center while he was screening, result- ion/answer period for the discussion often lead to something else. They were burning lots, sometimes without, irritating, but always uncomfortable. They were held in the gym, which was like holding them in the Rice gym in August. The only saving grace was the Good Man Who Parked his truck outside the gym the session was over.

For the three years previous to this Congress, there had been some kind of podium takeover by the idealists or Third World. This year it would be the exception, since major reforms in the structure of NSA had been made during this congress, but this proved to be a boon to the slogans. On the opening day, Friedman from Queens College, MMA, a black woman from Indiana, and Tim Higgins from Wisconsin. Friedman and Higgins were tied, and a ques- tion/answer period for the voting to begin, when sud- denly Friedman dropped out of the race, and gave his sup- port to Tim. It became immediately obvious that some see- mingly bad news and suddenly the whole at- mosphere changed and turned ambiguous. The evening bal- lot gave Higgins a clear vic- tory. At this time Omar Pervak, a Black Muslim from Chicago, stormed the podium to thank Tim Higgins. The next few minutes were confu- sion, anger, and violence. Before we knew it all the bottles that had been on the tables were on the floor, and the blacks were car- rying them around, gently. However, 45 minutes the Third World Ca- nton had left the gym and was ahead out the door. This was about 1:30 in the morning.

The next few hours were spent with the two groups discussing about what had happened, and what needed to happen next. In the end the Third World came back about Sam and someone should be held, with all the candidates in it. The winner was again Higgins, someone the organizers started to protest and walk out again. But we spent Omar Pervak up and said the system had declared Higgins the winner, and as such he was going to work with him to further commodity goals, not to denigrate each other. Sam was adjourned after also electing Ron Eluren- from Temple University in Philadelphia as vice-presider.

While the disorder and politics rampant at such a con- gress, it is easy to get dis- oriented, but this one was worth a damn, but something Margie Tabankin, the former president, said stuck in my mind, "This is the only game we'll ever get those services that I went up for. Marjoe Gortner has done the right thing, done something to the people that see them. They push them around, they make a lot of money, they use easy chemistry and morally and ideologically. In fact, the really avid moviegoers, the people who have seen the bad movies, stupid movies, simple-minded movies, come to the movies and their own reactions to the clumsy attempt of the movie makers to move in on the viewers. Like sex transformed into mechanisms by Buxom star-wives their fatal accident and the man life when Montana gives their family home and a truly fine film. At the same time he spoofs for better photo-trivia as THE OWL AND THE PIGMY and their celebration of new human life when Montana gives truthfully makes the heart rejoice.

George Roy Hill, however, has managed to direct an almost perfectly executed movie. His success as director of Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid is, has been and always will be. He received rave reviews upon publication of the book and the film. George Roy Hill, however, has managed to direct an almost perfectly executed movie. What does Marjoe do with the souls he saves? by VALERIE PERINE Marjoe Gortner was a victim of his parents' manic and depressive grandeur and, for a year or two, he continued to believe, learned lots of lessons through his cold-blooded exploitation of the offering plate to his own gain. He should have more sense of responsibility to those people—however truly, however much liars, however naive unclumsy of urban views they are—who believe in him and his powers to show them how to do good. He should have sympathy for them. He mustn't let us have fun at their innocent expense. And he should have respect for us. His appeal is great—he's a combination of David Frye and Mickey Mouse physically—yet and just use it to witlessly not only those poor arthritic old fella but us, whom he seems to be enlightening. The soul game, played with celluloid, has managed to seem cold, calculating, and evil—some knows this when he says, "I'm not evil, I'm good, and there's a difference," so that you know he's lying. Living the ascetic salesman who wants to be a Marjoe. He wins up seeming not cold or calculating, evil but sad, self-deluded, and had. It would be great to be evil—Mick Jagger is evil, and he's the closest thing to a hero that we have nowadays. But evil masquerade, not heroic but disgusting, not sexual and gross and vital but immoral and sick. Marjoe is a cheap cheerleader, and his victims are pitiful and legion.

"Marjoe" is a vicious, grasping, vulgar movie; its victims are us, if we applaud or are angry or if we call to our sense of our superiority to the victims we see Marjoe ripping off.

But the movie is very well done, very lucubrating, very slithering and septuagint and quick and razzle-dazzle. It is a dooey and I'm very happy finally to have escaped by writing this review. Don't let it sell you salvation by showing you that you're not already. That's a bad temptation to resist, the appeal to vanity, but do it, resist it, you lose your soul to Marjoe.

Pat Elliott and Bob Gammidge, the Republican and Democratic candidates, respectively, for Texas State Senatorial District 7 (which includes Rice) raised similar issues in their appearance Tuesday on KTRU's "Be Now You Can Vote" series. Although the candidates both emphasized such controversial issues as environmental protection, state spending, and welfare reform, each favored different solutions to these questions.

Economic boycott
"The citizenry and the state must be the one to clean up the environment, not the federal government," Elliott stated. "The federal, state, and local governments all have conflicting orders to the businesses, who is left with no effective course of action.
Elliott's environmental program would be to encourage cooperation of all the environmental groups, which could then publish a list of all the companies which are polluting. Next, citizens would organize an economic boycott of all the industries damaging the environment.

The remainder of Elliott's proposal is to bring court action against monopolies such as HLP if they are found to be polluting.

Regional planning
On the other hand, Gammidge advocated the non-employed practice of bringing federal pressure to bear against polluters.
"We have to look beyond the local level for environmental planning. Regional planning, involving both public and private influence, is the answer," he said.

"Also, the citizenry hasn't had the leverage to force industry (to stop polluting)," Gammidge continued.

On the issue of state spending, Gammidge stated that he supports corporate profits tax so that special money interests will pay their fair share of taxes. However, he opposes any increase in taxes until all "poll harmful projects" and "worthless" spending are eliminated.
"Texas is the only state without an income tax on businesses. It's unfair for the consumer to bear all the state tax burden," Gammidge stated. For the rest of Elliott's speech, the question was to hold the contest either to make it easier for the contest or to hold it in another position.

Candidates poll on Rice radio

Pat Elliott and Bob Gammidge, the Republican and Democratic candidates, respectively, for Texas State Senatorial District 7 (which includes Rice) raised similar issues in their appearance Tuesday on KTRU's "Be Now You Can Vote" series. Although the candidates both emphasized such controversial issues as environmental protection, state spending, and welfare reform, each favored different solutions to these questions.

Economic boycott
"The citizens and the state must be the one to clean up the environment, not the federal government," Elliott stated. "The federal, state, and local governments all have conflicting orders to the businesses, who is left with no effective course of action.
Elliott's environmental program would be to encourage cooperation of all the environmental groups, which could then publish a list of all the companies which are polluting. Next, citizens would organize an economic boycott of all the industries damaging the environment.

The remainder of Elliott's proposal is to bring court action against monopolies such as HLP if they are found to be polluting.

Regional planning
On the other hand, Gammidge advocated the non-employed practice of bringing federal pressure to bear against polluters.

Elliott opposes corporate income taxes on the grounds that "the tax will be passed along to the consumer" anyway. Also, he fears that such forms of taxation would cause a downturn in business expansion and ones.

Gammidge voted against new consumer taxes last year in his capacity as a state legislator and member of the "Dirty 30.

Also, the state provides money for children in families having no adult male head if the mother can't work.

He advocates a state-supported day care system for children to allow mothers of young children to find employment, which, he claims, would actually decrease welfare costs. Later in the year, KTRU hopes to sponsor similar discussions between candidates for other positions in the Rice area.

she was all of a sudden "home sick." In the history of political campaigning, the power of the McGovern vote manipulation machine. Many minority planks, both liberal and conservative, were presented and most had enough deluge support to necessitate a roll call vote. But McGovern procured his delegates to vote against the strong antiblight plank and again the $800 guaranteed income proposal and against the endorsement of the rights of homosexuals. The only plank accepted during the night were one dealing with Indian rights and another advocating a stronger stand on Israel. It was 5:15 a.m. when the Indian plank was adopted, the first constructive vote of the night, and the full minute of applause by the delegates, quite a feat at that time of the morning.

Some might say that it was a waste of time, but it was Democracy, sort of. McGovern had to be hurt in the Nebraska primary by his stand on abortion and a too-liberal plank would make it an easy target for the Republican opposition. He is not known for their gentility in combat.

Our man Briceo voted against the platform and said that he hoped to draw up a platform at the state convention on September 10 (here in Houston) that would be "compatible with the will of the Texas people." He did not look happy.

Visit with Wallace

The next morning, the Texas delegation was invited to have a private visit with Governor Wallace. He was gracious, but tired from his speech to the convention the night before, and a very sick man after the gunshot wounds, would not withdraw and hope that many would vote for him, but he had no illusions that he could win the nomination although he admitted that he represented more Americans than did McGovern. When told that there were some McGovern supporters in the room, he mentioned that he respected McGovern personally, but that it would be difficult for him to win in November. He reiterated that he would not run as a third party candidate.

It was a very sobering occasion for me.
