Dear Mr Hall Caine,

I am sending you herewith copy of the REVIEW OF REVIEWS, in which you will find that I have endeavoured to deal faithfully with you. I am sorry that you are disappointed in me, and hope that the perusal of this article will not deepen your disappointment. It would be a sorry thing if we could not discuss this matter frankly without straining our relations. I think you must admit that the deadly parallel from the "Manxman" is a score for my side of the question. Did you notice that the Editor of the WINDSOR MAGAZINE cut out the last three lines of your great scene, feeling I suppose that the suggestion was too obvious. I have not yet seen what he has done with Glory's expression of satisfaction and delight when she awoke next morning, but I should be surprised rather if he lets that remain.

I am,

Yours sincerely,

William T. Stead.
