My dear Mr. Cairne,

Your letter came yesterday & found me on my back with one of the vile congestive attacks which occasionally lay me low for a week or so. The Review of Reviews is simply scandalous, and I have wondered whether anything could be done. Any sort of writing for the next two or three days will be out of the question for me, I fear, but if I can rally sufficiently in time to get something done I shall be very glad. I do not wonder that you feel indignant at these malicious onslaughts of which Stead's is indeed a glaring specimen of abominable misrepresentation - The only consolation is that probably few readers take the R. & R. very seriously nowadays.

In reply to your enquiry Walter Lewin has definitely undertaken to write a paper for the Bitterhead delinquent Society - his intention being,
I believe, to treat your work ^{seriously}
with special reference to The Christian.
He has not, so far, obtained a copy of the book.

I will write again as soon as I feel better. Kindest regards,
A. Fetherhall.

Yours sincerely,
A. Fetherhall.
