My dear Sir Hall Caine,

It is indeed most kind of you to send me your last book, and you could not have pleased me better than by autographing it so that I can place it with others on the special shelf in my bookcase. As you know, I always read your books not only with pleasure but with a deep satisfaction, derived from the fact that you are dealing with a problem, and in your own original manner suggesting a solution. I am looking forward to a delightful and profitable week end with "The Master of Man," and I shall communicate with you again personally when I have absorbed it. I need scarcely add that later on when the opportune moment comes I shall review the book, and my pleasure in doing so is enhanced by the fact that I am aware whatever I say you will receive as an honest expression of opinion, as well as a tribute.

I trust that you are in good health and that, if it should really be that you are to write no further novels, you will feel that this latest product "of your heart and brain" crowns a long and honoured career of achievement.

With kindest regards, I am,

Yours sincerely,

James Pridley
