My dear Ralph,

I am dreadfully sorry to hear from your telegram that there have been further differences with Demenil. I do think it is not necessary for me now to know why about it. What happened in December nearly killed me.

The year is long by this date, or it have another such difference, nor will be more than I would bear. She dies I feel as if the drum had left a scar that will never heal.

Unless I hear from you tell the matter so or whatever I must hear what I will not open enter your letters or Demenil's.
Dear Mr. Baker,

I have not written since I arrived, and I cannot guess what the difference is about. He is, constitutionally, unable to see any of the other person's points of view.

That is the chief trouble. Of course, Mr. Baker's scheme is not a matter for me. Mrs. Baker's scheme is now in relation to the Parker's readjustment in relation to the Parker's scheme. In relation to the Parker's scheme, I have no sympathy.

So long as I have no sympathy, it is much an important matter. But it is not a point in view. If it isn't, I won't be concerned with it. I can avoid it.

I trust all goes well at home, which is the chief matter. I shall write later.

Right the night before I spoke it was light by much better. You have a big person's self need. You have a big person's self need, and I hope you will keep up head.
